ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY

NOW that it is practically assured that paper can be successfully made from wheat straw, the next move should be to establish a factory for this purpose in this province, where there is so much straw burned annually just to get it out of the way.

In the establishing of such a factory there are many things to be taken into consideration in order that the finished article may be produced as conveniently and as cheaply as possible. In this connection one very important matter is cheap fuel and power. If the provincial government is contemplating fattening any undertaking for the manufacturing of paper from this raw material, the attention of their officials, who are investigating the enterprise, should be drawn to the advantages of the Redcliff natural gas field for such a plant.

While it will be freely admitted that there are many other districts in the province which produce more straw than could be guaranteed in this particular district, yet there is always the question as to whether it is more economical to bring the raw material to the fuel, or bring the fuel to the raw material. The solution of this question depends upon the process through which the raw material has to pass, and the amount of fuel and power necessary to produce the finished article. The fact that all large manufacturing centres in all countries are where power and fuel are most convenient, shows that there is reason for considering the suggestion of bringing the raw material to the cheap and abundant fuel.

The matter in question would be well worth considering before taking any definite action.

Redcliff should have some kind of a community organization to take up matters of this kind. We will never get anywhere by just sitting still and doing nothing to improve conditions.

Reports from all quarters would indicate that we are on the eve of better times. If we are to share in those better times we must be up and doing.

MANNERS TODAY

AN exchange asks the question: "Where are the manners of our young people today?"

In answering this question the exchange says one cause of the disappearing manners has been the slackening of rules and old forms at our public dances. While it can hardly be denied that the manners, deportment, dignity and courtly bearing which at one time were characteristic of young people in the ball room or dance hall, is now sadly lacking, yet the dance itself is not altogether to blame. The fault lies primarily with the parents. At heart young people are very much the same with each succeeding generation. Styles of dress and styles of dancing may change from year to year but the fundamental up on which good manners are based never changes. If, therefore, the young people of today are said to be lacking in manners, it is because they don't know any better and if they don't know any better whose fault is it? The trouble today is not with our young people, but with our parents. Too many parents are too ready to blame the faults and shortcomings of the younger set on everything and everybody but themselves.

If dances of today have a tendency to blot out the finer instincts taught at home then the parents should do one of two things. They should either stop their children from going to them or else they should go with them and see that they conduct themselves properly.

There may be many different reasons to which constitutes manners. The courtliness which went with the old days of hoops and ruffles might appear ridiculous in a ball room of modern dress, but the underlying principles which prompted that courtliness are the same today.

Kindness, quietness, thoughtfulness for the feelings and comforts of others and cleanliness of body and mind will always stand a young man or woman in good stead, whether or not he knows which fork or spoon to use. In a girl, modesty and self respect will also mean good manners. Girls of this kind soon make the boys sit up and take notice.

Outside of Calgary and Edmonton the Greenfield government will be commended for delaying the development of the Spray Lake power scheme. This is no time to be spending huge sums of money on schemes which are in advance of the times. The limited benefits which would be derived from this development at the present time would not warrant the expenditure.

Judging from an editorial in the Calgary Alberta that paper is of the opinion that if the legislation had just remained in session for a few days and had passed all the motions of its editor member, the session would have been the most successful one on record.

The year promises to be a record one in Alberta for production of wheat and development in oil. It is a little early yet to make forecasts for the 1925 crop but weather indications so far are most promising. That there is oil in paying quantities in this province is now assured and the development in this line this summer will surpass all previous records. On the whole prospects are more promising than ever for Alberta.

5000 FACTS ABOUT CANADA

"5000 Facts About Canada" is famous as a rich storehouse of information about the Dominion. It is the collection of Frank Y. G. G. the recognized authority on this country as a representative public. Fifty chapters—From "Agriculture" to "Yukon"—include a series of striking facts presented in a crisp, terse form that fascinates the mind. The 1925 issue contains much new matter, including a striking comparative table of our natural resources. The book is a quarter century since 1900. The book may be secured at leading dealers, or by sending 50c to the Canadian Pacific Publishing Co., 288 Huron Street, Toronto. He who would know Canada will find this wonderful little book a mine to that end.

Saskatchewan Progressives will run candidates in 83 of the 85 constituencies in that province in the next provincial election. They say there is no working agreement between the Conservatives.

"The Town was Burned Three Days Later"

(1) The Wolfe headquarters, which survived the burning of St. Joachim, prior to the taking of Quebec, P. Q. (2) The second house to survive the burning by Wolfe. (3) An old church with very beautiful and rare lanterns at St. Joachim, P. Q.

Some parts of the world seem to have been created merely as stages for the pencil of history. On these stages the copy one written has been played out for a little, and then expiring to make room for fresh text. On others the original text has been of such import that Time has only served to fit the text more fittingly. The "scenes" more vividly, as when painters of old varnished their pictures to bring out the colors and "fix" them.

Now there is not a reader but can bring to mind without the slightest effort on his part scenes of such "scenes" as a million romances ... to read serially, or each an entity in itself ... might be swept from these earth-shakes of the Dominion on to the printed page, and still leave a million more untold.

And so it is that we learn to come back to the original state—the land itself, with its endless tales. The best short stories of this year and every year, past, present and to come.

Such a tiny state is the little village of Saint Joachim, a few miles from Quebec city. It begins in water-roads, back from the troying waters of the St. Lawrence takes a couple of steps upward and spreads out into a plain on which some scattered farmhouses of ancient habitant type and a church have been flung as if by way of illustration. Then the plain steps up suddenly into a low bench and the bench in turn spreads out levelly for a little way and then suddenly leaps with vim into Saint Cap-François, two thousand feet high, its head to the clouds and its feet eternally "plunging in the mighty river."

History had a mind to write a little up her mind to write a story here at the time she made up her mind to compose that greater romance which she changed the text on a date of continental magnitude, from French to English. So she set to work at once. And being herself all absorbed, like any modern business man by the larger work in hand, she detailed her St. Joachim communique to her secretary, General James Wolfe. Now the Wolfe pen was in the beginning a deep-set sword that grew in passion as the tale unfolded to a torch, as military romances in olden times unfolded everywhere. In order that there may be no confusion from the rear that might spell disaster to the larger work when the sword had put to rout the villagers, the match was laid to the scattered farmhouses, and when the smoke cleared two only remained, and they remain to this day. Brought into greater prominence by their age and the fact that they survived "when Wolfe burned the place." Thus do present day disasters, rubbed and polished by the friction of the years, often change into sancts of inextinguishable value.

So it falls out that Time, the great proof-reader, when he came to the manuscript written by Wolfe and his troops at Saint Joachim, approved of it in the main, but thought that he himself might add a line here and there which would add to the picture as a whole.

And though you may not think it, the "touches" that Time has added are the human interest touches. He tells that one of the houses, the low white one with the tall and stately American poplars, resembling Greek columns, in front, was "Wolfe's headquarters." He leaves it to us to screen in its doorway the asphalt-coated, lace-ruffled, powdered and bewigged soldier of that day, who for all "The pomp of power," which he knew by heart, had heart no doubt to regret war's necessity for the torch, burning the then even more than hundred-year-old farmhouses at his feet, going up in flames.

So, too, here at Saint Joachim, Time brings out a French oil painting of Saint Louis de Gonzague and pointing to the eyes, says, "Tears were seen to fall from these eyes three days before the burning of Saint Joachim." The picture then hung in the workshop of Monseigneur Laval. Saint Joachim as that time being part of the vast seigneurie belonging to the seigneur Laval. "On seeing those falling tears," Time says, "The people were deeply touched, wringing their hands and saying that something terrible was going to happen to them." And there on the margin of the old manuscript in Time's own handwriting is the illuminating line, "And the town was burned three days later."
